SecondSight and In2Matrix join forces to offer international employee benefits to multinational clients.

SecondSight (www.second-sight.com), the employee benefits specialist and In2Matrix, the international employee benefits brokerage and consultancy, have joined forces. Together the two businesses will provide multinational clients with an enhanced service - access to comprehensive UK and international benefits advice.

Multinational employers can find it challenging to access the correct employee benefits advice. With so many cultural and geographical variables to consider, anyone less than a specialist is often unable to provide true and accurate advice and guidance.

Ian Bird, director for business development at SecondSight said: "We are increasingly in contact with employers who have an international presence. Some will have offices in Europe and beyond, which can throw up a whole plethora of complexities. Each country often has different legal minimum requirements as to what they have to offer, as well as what they should provide to remain competitive.

"By exclusively linking up with the specialists In2Matrix, we'll now be able to provide current clients and new clients with robust international benefits advice and guidance, as well as continued access to our core benefits advice and communication."

Gerard Baltazar, chairman and chief executive, In2Matrix added: "This relationship provides significant benefits to multinational organisations in the UK. We are looking forward to working with SecondSight, offering a solution to multinational clients that need high quality international employee benefits.

"We're also excited to be able to introduce SecondSight to our UK based clients, to see how they will benefit from SecondSight's multi-award winning benefits service."
